worldview values, and an artistic imperative of the spiritual sovereignty of the Ukrainian nation. The study of the formation specifics of its musical component, which is a universal culture, understandable to the general public, through which the music and drama theatre promoted national culture, Ukrainian traditions in national and European artistic dimensions is one of the important tasks of modern art history.

Research issues of historical bases for the formation of Ukrainian theatrical art are revealed in the works of D. Antonovych [2], N. Andrianova [1], I. Marianenko [6], A. Krasynikova [4] and others. The works of O. Kysil [3], S. Fomskaya [9], V. Shurapov [11], and others are devoted to the study of certain cultural and artistic aspects of the development of national culture, educational, and theatrical associations in Ukraine. In the meantime, despite the importance of the scientists' work, the nation-building aspect of the formation of the multi-genre repertoire of the Ukrainian music and drama theatre in the context of nation-building in the late XIX – beginning of the XX centuries, still needs art history analysis. This is the reason for choosing the topic of the article, which aims to study the nation-building specifics of the repertoire of the Ukrainian music and drama theatre and determine its role in the establishment and ethnic self-identification of the Ukrainian nation.

Presentation of the basic material. The Ukrainian music and drama theatre in the analyzed period is of exceptional importance in the history of Ukrainian culture, and the spiritual progress of the Ukrainian nation because socio-political, national-cultural, and economic conditions in which the Ukrainian community existed in the Russian Empire was aimed at colonizing national ethnicity and culture. In such difficult conditions, developing as a holistic artistic phenomenon, music and drama theatre acquires importance as a nation-building phenomenon, an artistic vector of establishing ideological and aesthetic coordinates for the enrichment of Ukrainian culture, its popularization in national and all-European artistic dimension.

Despite the purposeful denationalization of the Ukrainian ethnic group at all levels in the late the XIX – beginning of the XX century, which was consistently implemented through a system of imperial legislative, executive, judicial bodies (circulars, directives, orders, statutes), music and drama theatre was a cultural phenomenon, as it had social value, reflected the national historical and cultural development, worldview ideas, values, mental characteristics of the nation as an ethnic group, its traditions, spiritual heritage, which Ukrainians have created over the centuries.

In the period of formation and constitution of national theatrical specifics music and drama theatre acts primarily as an artistic carrier of Ukrainian culture, playing a nation-building role in the socio-space of national culture. Outstanding theatre artists M. Kropyvnytskyi, M. Staritskyi, M. Sadowskyi, M. Zankovetska, P. Sakshanskyi, adhering to the cultural and historical traditions of T. Shevchenko, I. Kotlyarevskyi, focused their activities to the development of national style in their own work, the creation of a national theatre school, national multi-genre repertoire, which contributed to the preservation of the ethnic group, the formation of the nation, as well as interethic dialogue of cultures.

Ukrainian playwrights were distinguished by democratic views and proved to be defenders of the Ukrainian nation. Under their pen, the realities of the Ukrainians' life of those times arose, being shrouded in censorship, unpunished darkness, and arbitrariness of imperial power. In their works, playwrights promoted democratic ideas through artistic and stage images and raised the issue of national and social oppression of Ukrainians. The people's audience went to the Ukrainian theater, to talented actors who showed real-life and raised current issues and problems. Despite the prolonged censorship torture, Ukrainian playwrights fought hard, found out the reasons for the ban, found the ways to stage Ukrainian works, and fought for the right of national drama to be presented to a polyethnic audience.

The luminaries of the Ukrainian theatre believed that the repertoire should be selected taking into account the preferences of the audience and, on the other hand, the repertoire should have a moral and aesthetic impact on the audience. M. Zankovetska noted: “The educational significance of the theater is indisputable; such its importance can only increase if the general restrictive measures imposed on the stage are removed...on the stage, the educational significance of the theater will increase more...the theater in the province has improved in this sense, attracting the audience and having an educational influence on it” [10, 46].

As V. Yarosh notes, for M. Kropyvnytskyi, as a playwright, the theatre was a tribune from which the democratic principles of the national liberation movement were propagated to the general public. The artist noted that in order to successfully solve nation-building tasks it is necessary to know and understand the people's life, their joy and sorrow, and hope for a free Ukrainian theater groups demonstrated national theatrical art in St. Petersburg, Kursk, Rostov-on-Don, Katerynodar, Taganrog, Novocherkassk, Volga region (Simbirsk, Nizhny Novgorod, Kazan, Saratov, Samara), Belarus (Minsk), Moldova, (Tiraspol, Chisinau, Ocniata), Bucharest, Poland (Warsaw and Lodz), as well as Smolensk, Tiflis, Vilnius, Batumi, and other cities. The best works of national drama, aimed at promoting the ethnocultural identity of the Ukrainian nation, were presented to a wide range of the community: "Nazar Stodolya" by T. Shevchenko, "Zaporozhets beyond the Danube" by S. Gulak-Artemovskyi, "Natalka Poltavka" by I. Kotlyarevskyi, "Shelmenco the Batman", "The Matchmaking in Goncharivka" by H. Kvitka-Osnovianenko, "The Profiteer, or the Spider", "True Story", "The Captive", "After the

9. Fomskaya, S. M. "Harkusha", "Unhappy Love" by L. Manko and others [8, 410]. Theatrical performances were a real holiday for both Ukrainians living in these territories and for the polytechnic community and were always sold out. Promoting national culture, presenting a wide range of national repertoire of various genres introduced the audience to Ukrainian culture, traditions attracted them to the Ukrainian theatrical art. Thus, the activities of prominent national theatrical figures popularized Ukrainian culture among a wide range of polyethnic audiences. Numerous reviews on the pages of local periodicals, dedicated to outstanding masters of the Ukrainian stage, confirm the fact that viewers and reviewers perceived their work as deeply national, and therefore – a culture-forming one.

Conclusions. During the imperial colonization of culture, prominent theatre figures focused on preserving ethnocultural identity, consolidated around the creation of a national multi-genre repertoire, that professed and presented the traditions, and worldview values of Ukrainians contributed to national self-affirmation and the preservation of the cultural identity.
